Google Vai Responder Perguntas Complexas...

SOCIAL MEDIA BRANDSPHERE

by Brian Solis & JESS3

Social networks and channels present brands with a broad array of media opportunities to engage customers and those who influence them. Each channel offers a unique formula for engagement where brands become stories and people become storytellers. Using a transmedia approach, the brand story can connect with customers differently across each medium, creating a deeper, more enriching experience. Transmedia storytelling doesn't follow the traditional rules of publishing; It caters to customers where they connect and folds them into the narrative. In any given network, brands can invest in digital assets that span five media landscapes:

1. Paid: Digital advertising, banners, adwords, overlays
2. Owned: Created assets, custom content
3. Earned: Brand-related conversations and user-generated content
4. Promoted: In-stream or social paid promotions vehicles
5. Shared: Open platforms or communities where customers co-create and collaborate with brands

Any combination of the five media strategies defines a new Brandsphere where organizations can capture attention, steer online experiences, spark conversations and word of mouth, and help customers address challenges or create new opportunities. Each media channel connects differently with people and thus requires a dedicated approach integrating tangible or intangible value. Doing so ensures a critical path for social media content: relevance, reach and resonance.

A young woman with a wide smile is holding a large, rectangular cardboard sign. She is wearing a black sleeveless top with a graphic, a necklace with a large, light-colored, heart-shaped pendant, and a ring on her left hand. The sign is made of corrugated cardboard and has the following text written in black marker: "TOO UGLY", "TO PROSTITUTE", "TOO STOOPID", and "TO STEAL" followed by a simple smiley face drawing. The background shows a paved sidewalk and a building with large windows.
